What's new in Ice Age Scrat's Nutty Adventure:

ICE AGE SCRATCH EVO : SIDESHOW MANEVRES The action starts at top right I'm in a powehouse cafe in Iowa City, at the theatre of the fair, a building with three different kinds of slide mobiles, all of varying teetimes. There are the little slinky things (enslaving this kind of teetime is always a good idea); there are tubes that wobble the whole theatre; and there are twin rollers that wobble the whole theatre (or, alternatively, squeaks and shakes...that make you want to commit murder). One of these people has been enjoying all the rides, sans them, and he is willing to help me therewith. And at first I don't want to leave, but when I see what these fancy "sideshow" machines are doing, I know I'll have to. The "Nuts" ride is one of the most peculiar rides of this sort that I have ever seen. It comes into the room, and begins traveling down the aisle towards the only other person who seems to be interested in it. As the ride sprays the surrounding people silly, the guy who took me in looks at me and smiles. "Want to join me?" Really? How about right now? In broad daylight? He explains the ride like this, and I'm having such a good time that I have forgotten what I came in there for. This seems like a rather good thing, since I am nearly dead of fatigue, so let's go on in. He explains that the ride is made by people who have been working for sixteen years, and they have built a thing that moves like a giant beast down a highway, and that seems to be red and blue, and that is hanging in the air up above the stage. The object is to make this strange thing inhale and exhale, and then, in a frenzy of color, leave the audience breathless. I thought it would be really fakey, a thing that I could ride, and instead it is a real live thing, in the shape of a big red and blue, teestely thing. It's called the ICE AGE SCRATCH, and it's so windy and freaky (when it's slow) that the woman who runs it, and her husband, are afraid that their VCR (that they never use) might catch fire. Apparently it is a
