The human immunodeficiency virus type 1 (HIV-1) is one of the causative agents of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS). Among the identified viruses causing AIDS, HIV-1 has been most thoroughly studied. Originally, it was considered to be a property of the immune system, but further study found that HIV-1 may also act on the brain and manipulate the central nervous system. MicroRNAs (miRNAs) are a family of small noncoding RNA molecules about 22 nucleotides in length and function mainly as gene regulators by translational repression or degradation of mRNAs. In this review, we will
