The sheet .Two distinct but related intracellular calcium response pathways are activated in primary sensory neurons by NGF. NGF-stimulated increases in intracellular calcium levels of mouse dorsal root ganglion (DRG) sensory neurons were examined to investigate the mechanism by which this neurotrophin can activate various signaling pathways. In isolated neurons, NGF rapidly and transiently increased calcium levels in a receptor-dependent manner. Ca²⁺ was released from a predominantly intracellular pool via two distinct mechanisms; blockade of inositol 1,4,5-triphosphate (InsP₃) synthesis by thapsigargin inhibited the NGF-induced Ca²⁺ release, whereas blockade of ryanodine receptor by ryanodine did not. The existence of such a separate pathway of Ca²⁺ release was confirmed in intact DRG. The InsP₃-sensitive pathway was activated by NGF regardless of the presence or absence of extracellular Ca²⁺; it was, however, independent of phospholipase C activation. The N
